Workflow FAQs

What is a storyboard?

A: A storyboard is an inventory of your software's users, features, and specific functions. We use this tool as a means to outline your system before any conceptual wireframing begins. It allows us to consider who your users are, what features they'll have access to, and how those features will function.

Why is a storyboard important?

A: Your storyboard allows us to evaluate your product from a 360-degree perspective (users, features, and actions). This is the primary tool we use to wireframe the first versions of your desired product. Each component of your system will transform from a simple statement to a depicted workflow using your storyboards as a guide.

How do I create a storyboard?

A: Every software project we embark on begins with our guided information collection phase. This phase is dedicated to refining your idea and committing those concepts to paper in a format that allows us to build your storyboards one step at a time.
